National Responses to Covid-19 in Southeast Asia

Brunei

Initially implementing drastic measures to clamp down on travel, imposing strict quarantine rules, and conducting extensive testing, the sultanate is one of the first countries in Southeast Asia to enter its final phases of reopening. Containment policies have been lifted in phases over the past several months as Brunei's case tally has remained relatively flat. Most cases in Brunei can be linked back to a large-scale religious event in Malaysia at the end of February.

Geography and demographics may be important factors here: Laos is relatively sparsely populated and surrounded by neighbors which have managed to contain the virus relatively well.

Malaysia

Malaysia's initial response to the outbreak was nonchalant and complicated by an abrupt change in government. In mid-March, the government imposed nationwide restrictions on public movement, which were gradually relaxed as the virus was brought under control. Prime Minister Muhyiddin Yassin is on shaky political ground and is under pressure to call an election soon. Doing so during a pandemic will present a major challenge for the government.

The situation there continues to worsen as fears mount that the virus could spread unchecked through the vulnerable Rohingya community. Vietnam

Despite limited resources and a bustling border with China, Vietnam initially managed to effectively contain the pandemic. Life had returned to normal for most Vietnamese until a recent uptick in cases in the tourist city of Danang, which has since spread to other cities. The second surge in cases nearly doubled Vietnam’s case count, and Vietnam recorded its first handful of deaths at the end of July. Hanoi’s response has been swift, evacuating the city of Danang and rolling out extensive contact tracing and testing. The government now says the epicenter is under control. Vietnam offers an important cautionary tale: no country, no matter how effective its initial response, is out of the woods yet. New imported cases are inevitable as countries reopen, and vigilance is paramount.

ASEAN Response to Covid-19

While ASEAN has convened a series of meetings on how to deal with the pandemic, including with external partners such as the United States, China, and the European Union, there has been little collective action. Diplomatically, the crisis has threatened ASEAN’s centrality in regional affairs, with the crisis causing the cancellation of several key ASEAN meetings, including the ASEAN-U.S. summit scheduled for March 14 in Las Vegas and the 36th ASEAN Summit scheduled for April 6-9 in Vietnam. The latter was held as a virtual summit on June 26 where leaders agreed to establish an ASEAN Covid-19 fund and a regional reserve of medical supplies and coordinated disease response mechanisms.

International Assistance to Southeast Asia

China's "Mask Diplomacy"

With Covid-19 largely contained domestically, the Chinese government has pivoted to providing assistance abroad. Southeast Asia is a particular focus. Unlike in Europe, where China's so-called "mask diplomacy" has generated criticism due to some faulty equipment and skepticism about Beijing's geopolitical intentions, Southeast Asian governments have welcomed China's emergency medical assistance. Chinese aid generally consists of surgical masks, test kits, and other equipment, as well as dispatching medical experts. Equipment is typically handed over with great fanfare.
