Economics Is All about Disruption
Matthew P. Goodman explains that economics has always involved disruption. The key to progress is ensuring that there are more winners than losers from disruptive change and that the latter benefit from the broader gains in prosperity. Read more.

Breaking down the G20 Covid-19 Fiscal Response
The CSIS Simon Chair analyzes the components of G20 countries’ fiscal responses to the Covid-19 pandemic and related economic shock. Read more.

Now Is the Right Time for a Trade Agreement with Taiwan: CSIS senior adviser Kurt Tong explains the unique opportunity to focus on a U.S.-Taiwan trade agreement this year given positive headlines, U.S. politicians looking for ways to stand up to China, and markets looking for ways to bounce back from Covid-19. LATEST FROM RECONNECTING ASIA

Trading for Influence? While much attention has been focused on economic coercion, inducements have also played an important role in China’s toolkit. Ramping up U.S. efforts at bilateral and multilateral economic engagement would provide more credible or appealing alternatives. Read more.

The Strategic Benefits of KORUS
The strategic benefits of trade with partners and allies can reach well beyond the corners of a deal, Wendy Cutler and Seok young Choi explain, pointing to the United States-Korea Free Trade Agreement (KORUS). Read more.

Data GEM: International Financial Institutions Step Up, but Debt Sustainability Looms Large for Future Support
By Stephanie Segal
CSIS is tracking approvals by major international financial institutions (IFIs) in response to Covid-19, however their ability to provide financing over the medium-term will depend on affirmative assessments of recipient countries’ debt sustainability. Read the full analysis.
