LATEST FROM CSIS ECONOMICS

The G7's New Global Infrastructure Initiative

G7 leaders unveiled an initiative to support global infrastructure, launched as China's Belt and Road Initiative pulls back. To succeed, the United States and its partners must design incentives that mobilize private capital and appeal to leaders in the developing world.

The CPTPP and Intellectual Property Rights Protection

At some point, the Biden administration will almost certainly consider joining the CPTPP, a process that will provoke new discussion of the provisions dropped or suspended from the TPP. Read more.

Experts React: Assessing the White House 100-Day Supply Chain Review

CSIS experts discuss the findings of the Biden administration's 100-day review of U.S. supply chain vulnerabilities and its implications for U.S. economic policy and national security. Read more.

IN THE NEWS

“As every Asian hand knows, 80 percent of success in Asia is showing up. Because we are a Pacific power, but not an Asian country, we have to demonstrate through our physical presence that we are committed to the region.”

Matthew Goodman | Politico

“The B3W could attract investors embracing environmental, social and governance (ESG) goals. However, public funds from G7 countries will be needed to prepare projects and provide guarantees so that the risk-reward calculus becomes more favorable.”
